Women with Spina Bifida are choosing pregnancy, however there is little information available to counsel them regarding maternal and neonatal outcomes. The Pregnancy Outcomes in Women with Spina Bifida Study is an international study that has already captured reproductive health outcomes from over 100 women with spina bifida, being the largest study of its kind to date. This project involves used of this data set to discover major maternal and neonatal outcomes in this population, as well as the effect of pregnancy on the health of women with spina bifida.
